Newdays computer gaming become a part of life for lots of people all around the world. That's especially popular around kids and teens. And if a game is good, interesting and, what's the most important, has some information that can be useful in real life, there's no problem to play in it.

However, video gaming may become an addiction. What is worse there are also bad games that just waste your time. You get nothing or maybe just some cheap dopamine. But, as every addiction works, later you stop to get even that. And little kids waste their life on it. They (and also teenagers) stop to care about grades at school. What to do with that? As for me, I like to turn some activities into a game, maybe others too? For example, treat to homework as to daily tasks for that you get "coins" (good marks) and skills, that will help you to defeat final boss (exams) and finish the game. Also ask yourself: "If the game doesn't make me happy as before, and h/w also do not, shouldn't I choose the one thing that is more useful?" And it is studying.

What about social life - I know people who made friends in video games. If a kid can't find friends at school and there's no other place for it, it's a good start! And gaming already is your both's interest, so you already have a topic to talk.

 Gaming is not a bad thing - it's a hobby. As fishing. But fishing plot also may become an addiction and ruin your life.

Writing

More and more young people spend most of their time playing computer games. Spending most of time for games means that they spend much less time for school. Not do or do bad homework will affect their grades. And getting bad grades at school is a big problem because with bad grades you can't end school, and also that mean ~~you~~ they are not teaching.

Other problem of spending most of time for computer games that probably you will have no social life. All or most of your friends will live far away from you, even in other country. And probably that friends will be not "real", not like friends that you can get in school. Without properly social life you can't socialize and that will turn into a big problem in future. Without social skills it's hard to get job or even have a talk with live person in front of you.

Now I will try to answer how to deal with that addiction problem. Firstly we can make more discussion like work in classes. For example ~~when we~~ at English lessons sometimes we have a discussion task between 2 of ~~the~~ classmates but why we can't get same work at our main language or literature? My second idea is once I heard that children in China have time limit for playing computer games, so why can't we have one? But I think China time limit is some stric so we can have something like rewards for good grades. ~~of parent~~ like parents can regular limits and make quests with rewards for their child.
